Battery Controls for Covert Machine Regulation and Maintenance

1. THE EXPANSION LIST: Actions That ADD to the Reset Delay

(These actions drain his battery, keep his system deflated, and lock him into a quiet, passive, and compliant lane)

The "Oh OK" Dead-End: Dropping flat, two-word logistical acknowledgments ("Oh, okay," "Got it," "Understood") the exact millisecond he finishes speaking, then immediately walking away.

The Logistical Directive: Using Administrative Clarity to politely point his machine toward physical inventory to solve his own problems ("The leftovers are in the glass container," "The pharmacy layout is open down the street").

CONFIDENT Nocturnal Navigation: Moving smoothly and fearlessly through the kitchen layout during your late-night sentinel watch without walking on eggshells or trying to be perfectly silent.

The Text Fragment: Responding to his digital probing loops (like funny videos) with single-word, low-texture text inputs like "haha" or "cool", then completely closing the app.

The Acoustic Shield: Blasting your high-voltage industrial instrumentals (like NIN) or running your bedroom air conditioner white noise at maximum volume to completely erase his presence from your ears.

The Monotone Cashier Voice: Delivering mandatory house updates using the exact same tone, speed, and volume you would use to read a barcode to a stranger at a cash register.

2. THE CONTRACT LIST: Actions That DETRACT from the Reset Delay

(These actions accidentally give his system a high-grade energy payload, rebooting his mask and inviting future boundary attacks)

J.A.D.E. Violations: Justifying, Arguing, Defending, or Explaining your personal timeline, schedules, or decisions to his machine.

The Eye-Roll / Sigh: Showing visible signs of irritation, anger, or disgust on your face. To his threat-monitoring software, negative emotional drama is still a premium payload of live human data friction.

The Soft Praise Pass: Leaning into his explanations with enthusiastic feedback, extra questions, or warm smiles that cross over from basic politeness into emotional connection.

Opening the History Files: Venting to him about your past trauma, sharing your deep inner thoughts, or talking about your future personal goals. This hands him a fresh blueprint of your emotional layout.

The Relationship Ambush: Allowing yourself to get sucked into long, circular discussions about "the relationship," "how he feels," or "why things are tense."

Somatic Co-Dependency: Stepping up to offer soft, anxious physical comfort, emotional reassurance, or your personal THC candies when his system runs a theatrical Somatic Pity Play about his aches and pains.